In a summary

I have 25 years of experience of cybersecurity and risk management. Over time I've come to realize that you have to test the controls to be sure they are working. like a pentation test, i.e. try to force entry, even it's supposed to be blocked. If's it succeeded and forces entry, what the control designed for is not to allow unauthorize entry. TIBER is a framework to try and do testing of controls as safe as possible. The framework was designed with finalcial infrastructure in mind, not to distrurb sociaty but still be forceful and test the finacial infrastructure. Just like someone else would do. With the TIBER-framework it's supposed to be safer.

I have experience from organizing cybersecurity and presenting it in a risk context to different stakeholders (i.e. customers, people that work in the org. or other parties)

My work-experience includes dealing with risks for manufacturing sectrets to finacial stability risks (e.g. Risk of people not able to puchase food (not able eat))

My characteristics are to visualise as much as possble seen from the positive angle. I tend to be driven, a delivery builds trust. I deliver. I believe that the cost for delivering must not mean to take shortcuts just to make the delivery.

I'm personally devoted to have anyone else to succeed, resulting that we both together win (a win-win)!

Last but not least in is important to preserve the trust external stakholders have. Sometimes your customers are among these external stakeholders.

About me

- Live outside Stockholm, SWEDEN
- A Swedish citizen (and has always been)
- Live in a free-standing house with my wife and 2 kids (+1 kid that has moved out)
- Traveling is OK, my family would not like to re-locate, dad-travel is OK.

- Find much enjoyment being outdoors - Nature & wildlife
- Exercising my body I love to do (I prefer a gym, but not a must)
